

We've discussed a lot of non-traditional ideas, but don't totally throw the tradition out the window. The classic saying "Something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue" is still a staple in modern ceremonies. Would you be able to wear your mother's wedding dress or have it altered to fit your needs? Is there a veil or family jewelry that could be passed down for the ceremony? What important detail could be borrowed from a loved one? Things don't have to be brand new to be special. In fact, these kinds of things often have more meaning for those involved.

Don't forget to include the groom's side when thinking along these lines. This is a great way to join the two traditions into your new blended family. ■
